A photograph of a wooden helix structure, possibly a model or a piece of art. The structure is made of light-colored wood and features a spiral design. A sign is attached to the structure, and a label is visible on a lower section. The background is dark and out of focus.

What happens in the helix – stays in the helix.
(Unless it rolls out at the bottom.)

Tulsa Union Depot

The Tulsa Union Depot was built in 1911 by a consortium of three railroads that would use the depot, the Frisco, M&T, and Santa Fe. The design fits the PWA Moderne style of Art Deco and its theme is derived from Native American art, which is common around Tulsa. Note that the Depot is actually two buildings, a single facility on the left and a smaller one on the right. In the 1980's the Santa Fe was still independent and operated "discovery" and "flag" train cars. The right side of the depot was for freight and the left side was for passenger trains.

Today the passenger loading and to the tracks is gone, and so are the water tower, platform, and stairs. The main depot building has been renovated and now houses the Oklahoma State Office of Tourism.
